

Agrarian & Worker Struggle in Nicaragua

Celebrating 40 years of the Asociación de Trabajadores del Campo

NEW DATES: June 18 – June 28, 2018

Honor the history of worker struggles for land and dignity in Nicaragua!

Nicaragua's Rural Workers' Association, or Asociación de Trabajadores del Campo (ATC), was founded in 1978 by landless farmworkers who, inspired by liberation theology, decided to change their lives and defend their rights in the midst of the 45-year Somoza regime. The ATC would become a major force for worker power in the Sandinista Revolution, through continuous farmworker literacy programs, collective bargaining, and women's worker councils. The ATC is now a strong voice for food sovereignty and agroecology, both in Nicaragua and internationally as a member organization of the Latin American Coordination of Organizations from the Countryside (CLOC) and the global peasant movement, La Via Campesina.

Join the ATC in 2018 as it celebrates 40 years of struggle for dignity, health, land, water, seeds and social justice. The delegation will tour ATC cooperatives and labor unions in Estelí, the ATC's autonomous schools, and spend a few days in a rural community homestay. Learn from the Via Campesina's processes of popular peasant education, feminism and agroecology. Delegates are also invited to play an important role in building international solidarity through the creation of a declaration upon conclusion of the delegation to share with the broader solidarity community in the US and beyond.
